11. Do the farmers practice any traditional soil and water conservation measures? Yes / No

If yes, what are they?

→ Yes, farmers often practise traditional soil and water conservation measures, which are time tested and adapted to local conditions. These include techniques like contour plowing, where crops are planted among the natural contours of the land to reduce water runoff and soil erosion. They also use terracing on slopes creating steps like structure to prevent soil loss and retain water. Mulching with organic materials, such as leaves or straw, helps conserve soil moisture and improve fertility. Additionally, farmers build small checkdams or bunds to trap rainwater and prevent erosion in dry regions. These methods ensure sustainable use of soil and water resources.
